

A COUNT'S ROMANCE.

There enlisted in Adelaide yesterday for active service a gentleman who has had an interesting career, Count Carl Gyllensten, or, as he will be known now, Private Carl. He is a Russian nobleman, and was once a wealthy man. In a big London bank smash a year or two before the war he lost £22,000. All he saved out of the wreck was £200. With this he came to Australia, working in Melbourne, Papua, and Darwin, and finally on the East-West railway, where he was a head chainman.
