

RUSSIA AND PEACE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE AGE.

Sir,—Now that an armistice has been declared and the Germans have already evacuated a large portion of the Allies' country, may I say a word for unhappy Russia? We have had an unofficial list of a large number of statesmen who will probably sit at the Peace Conference, but so far no one has been selected to represent Russia. Who could be more suitable for the purpose than M. Kerensky or General Brussiloff? In these days of victory let the Allies not forget that Russia lost 13,000,000 men, and at the Warsaw battle alone lost 2,000,000 men. Surely for the sake of these 13,000,000 brave men who died for the cause of the Allies, Russia—although betrayed—has as much right as any other of the Allies to be represented at the Peace Conference.—Yours, &c.,

H. G. ABRAHAMOVITCH.

23rd November