

SUPPLIED LIQUOR TO ABORIGINAL

£25 Fine at Port Augusta

PORT AUGUSTA, Wednesday.— When an aboriginal woman called out "Walga walga" to several companions who had been suspected of drinking wine, she was warning them of the approach of the police. Plainclothes Constable A. J. Litster said in the Port Augusta Police Court today.

Walter Saari, who gave his address as Whyalla, but who had been released from the Port Augusta Gaol on Monday, was found guilty of supplying Frederick Williams, an aboriginal, with intoxicating liquor, and was fined £25 with 7/6 costs, in default three months' imprisonment.

Evidence showed that defendant was seen walking with Williams in the direction of the cemetery with bottles in his pockets. Williams appeared to be under the influence of liquor.

Later, the police came on a party of natives picnicking behind some bushes in the sandhills near the cemetery.

Saari said that if the natives had any of his wine they must have taken it without his knowing.

Williams was fined £1 with 7/6 costs.
