

PROBABLY SUICIDE

Police Theory of Domain Shooting

After further consideration of circumstances and facts, the police officers investigating the death of Matrofan Koropets, whose body was found in the Domain on Thursday morning, have decided to report to the coroner that the case, in their opinion, is one of suicide and not murder, as was at first suspected.

To substantiate the suicide theory, Inspector Robinson, who is in charge of the case, is of the opinion that the dead man could have walked some distance after firing the shot, and the revolver may have been picked up by somebody passing. He requests that anyone who finds the weapon should immediately communicate with the police.
