

"I KNEW THE GOOD SAMARITAN.."

Dr. Benson praises
Sir Norman Myer

● Sir Norman Myer's funeral passes his Bourke st. emporium, watched by some of the thousands of people who lined city streets.

Sir Norman Myer was an anonymous Good

Sir Norman Myer was an anonymous Good Samaritan to a host of people, the Rev. Dr. Irving Benson told a crowded congregation at the funeral service of Sir Norman in Wesley Church yesterday.

"I know, because he entrusted me with many of those gifts, and told me that the recipients should not know whence they came," Dr. Benson said.

He described Sir Norman as a "dynamic citizen, a great Australian, a man of throbbing energy and boundless enterprise."

He was a man who had survived one of the greatest tests that could be applied to the human spirit—he had survived success, Dr. Benson said.

The congregation num-

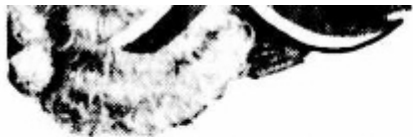

MAPLES
Mastell
Make Holidays

bered about 1,500. About a thousand others gathered outside the church, and heard Dr. Benson's panegyric relayed by loud speakers.

"It is said with truth that Sir Norman Myer was a merchant prince of great stature," Dr. Benson said. "A mere recital of his achievements and interests tell their own story of a rich and fruitful life."

"He never forgot that other men had labored and that he had entered into their labors.

*Make Holidays
Happy Days!*

PORTABLES

and that he had entered into their labors.

"He was a courageous and venturesome leader, but he was proud of the fact that his workers were his partners, and their welfare was his constant concern.

"He made money, but money never got him.